Galen: Hi, James. It's been a long time since I wrote, only my third contact, I think. Many times I have had questions for you, but I submit them at bedtime to Isvara and it is rare that I don't have an answer by the morning.

Today I realised that Vedanta is a do-it-yourself guru kit. When you get all the pieces in place and do some fine-tuning and run a few doubts through the machine, you realise how wonderful it is and your confidence in it grows by leaps and bounds.

I guess that your job is to enable us to assemble the kit until it works.

The last query I had was that I was stuck wondering how to get free from the thinker, thinking about it all the time, ha ha. Then it hit me, of course I am just watching all these doubts and the answering of the doubts by means of the Vedanta machine.

I have fallen in love with Vedanta (loving a robot in my mind, better call it Isvara or something, sounds so much better). There is no better time spent than listening to your talks, reading some Dayananda or scripture. I particularly love Atma Darshan after hearing your talks and reading the remainder a few times.

Thanks heaps for overseeing my robot-Vedanta-machine construction, I shall treasure it and maintain it because I love it.

~ Love and appreciation, Galen
