

You Are Moksa

Ram (James Swartz)

2011-07-20

Source: <http://www.shiningworld.com/site/satsang/read/1057>

Lannie: Dear James, wow, I don't know what to say. I don't know what happened, but some kind of shift took place. There is a sense of not feeling like a localized person. Everything is so easy. Something happened, maybe by Grace.

There is a sense of being free from all anxiety, but I haven't "checked out" and am taking care of business so much more effectively than I have in a very long time, maybe ever.

My friend and I have re-connected. I have dropped neurotically analyzing everything that goes on between us and trying to fit us into this masculine/feminine role-playing thing. It is easy and breezy. Whatever happens, happens.

I am still very closely reading your chapters on karma, dharma and karma yoga. I am also reading your latest blog entry on Advaita Academy. Great story!!

I do want moksa more than anything else and I know in every fibre of my being that no object in the world can provide that lasting peace/happiness, and do not want to go back to self-ignorance.

Thank you so very much.

~ Much love, Lannie

James: Well, if you don't shift back and find that the idea that you want moksa disappears, you are moksa.